The surveying light; for, like a two-edged sword, it wounded Lord's blessed day of rest that beautiful party engaged in locating the air-line from Jackson, Tenn., to Mayfield, Ky., completed - their labors last Saturday. A full report of their labor will be published in due course of time. From a distinguished gentleman whom we met on last Wednesday, we learn that the distance from Jackson to Mayfield, by one survey, is eighty miles, while by another, the distance is 81; the latter route being even lower and with less curvature than the track of the Mobile and Ohio road. The projected road will cross the Memphis and Ohio road at Milan, 13 miles east of Humboldt, thus shortening the distance to Louisville ten miles; the new road also passes by Dresden and one or two other trading points of considerable importance. As we have heretofore stated, a monster bridge is to be built at Paducah, from which point roads will diverge to Vincennes, In dianapolis, Springfield, and, possibly, to Chicago direct. When the contemplated mprovements have all been made the $7, 000,000 now invested in the Central road will loom up to double the amount; in proportion, the N. O., J., & G. N. R. R. Co. will be benefitted. With such a prospect before them, it would be prima facia evidence of a lack of foresight if the representatives of the roads mentioned did not bend their energies to the task and urge on the work so auspiciously begun. The moneyed men of Paducah too should redouble their labors in behalf of the Air Line road, for of all others, they are the most interested. The completion of the road will make Paducah a city ten times its present size in less than ten years.

Chicago, St. Louis, Vincennes, Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Louisville are alive to the project and will not fail to see the point. Push on the work and let the various links be completed as early as possible. The first car loaded at Chicago and sent-through to New Orleans will usher in a tide of prosperity to the reads in this section that can never subside os long as we are one people, and will be the harbinger of untold thousands to the business men of New Orleans.

Our neighbor, Jackson, should even now be all aglow with the hope of "stirring time;" for the completion of the Air Line road will most assuredly prove of great ben. efit to her, and all the various roads that consentrate there. We wonder that our able cotemporary, the West Tennesssee Whigh don't catch up the "war hoop" and send it pealing into every homestead in Madison county. What the Charleston road is to Memphis the proposed Air Line will be to Jackson. We want to see the road completed because it will benefit our friends if it does not benefit us. It will be a grand now, since his nappy majesty's sudden desuccess, and the people of Jackson will most assuredly live to see it. Jackson is so situated and naturally gifted that she can, by reduced to the position of a third or fourth putting forth her strength, soon become the rate power, and shall become like decrepid greatest inland city between the lakes and old Spain, the debtor, the beggar, the vagathe gulf. Therefore, we say to her people, do not delay; pash onward, give the proposed road a hearty, liberal grasp with the right the radicals of Congress seem bent upon hand of improvement, and in due season with a malignant madness, an inconceivable the rewards of judicious labor will cluster | themselves and to the whole country-all, | acted upon by the planters and mechanics gen thick around you. We call the attention of the public to the following communication from one of the reliable, enterprising citizens of the county, and hope that it will not go by unheeded. Our people should take hold of the matter and go to work at once. HARDEMAN Co., TENN., Jan. 25, 1868.

Editor of Bolivar Bulletin: While movements are being made all over the country to advance the agricultural and mechanical interests of the South, why is it that the people of Hardeman county have not made some effort by concert of action to endeavor to draw toward us some of the tide of emigration that is constantly moving west? We certainly possess many advantages of society, of soil and climate, of timber and facilities of communication by railroads and river that would attract the attention of farmers and skilfull mechanics could we but properly present them, and offer some inducements for such to come

The object of this communication is not to enter into a discussion of this subject, of the importance of which all must agree, but simply to suggest to you as the best means to accomplish an object so important, that we should again revive the old Agricultural and Mechanical Association, once so prosperous and pleasant to us all. At the regu lar monthly meetings of which these and kindred subjects might be discussed and erally over the country, and I do not doubt but that good would result.
